THE TYRANNY OF TECHNIQUE: WHERE "EVIDENCE-BASED" INTERVENTIONS FAIL
DR. DAN GOTTLIEB

CONFERENCE SUMMARY

This interactive workshop is designed for social workers and mental health professionals at all stages of their careers. Dr. Gottlieb will address how evidence-based techniques can help, but sometimes may also do harm to our clients. As a group, we will address how and why clinicians may treat a DSM-V diagnosis but may overlook the client's humanity. Dr. Gottlieb will discuss the situations where evidence-based techniques are most effective and where they interfere. We will talk about whether or not homework is helpful or harmful, depending on the client and the therapist. This conference will also explore the use of self, and the idea that the therapists' vulnerability might be the only way to create a safe environment.

OBJECTIVES

- Participants will explore new ways of conceptualizing patient needs
- Participants will learn how some treatment techniques may harm the treatment process
- Participants will discuss how and when to use techniques
- Participants will examine the utility of their own vulnerability
